Foreword

This five volume report has been prepared for the Congress and the American people as required by Public Law 93–179.

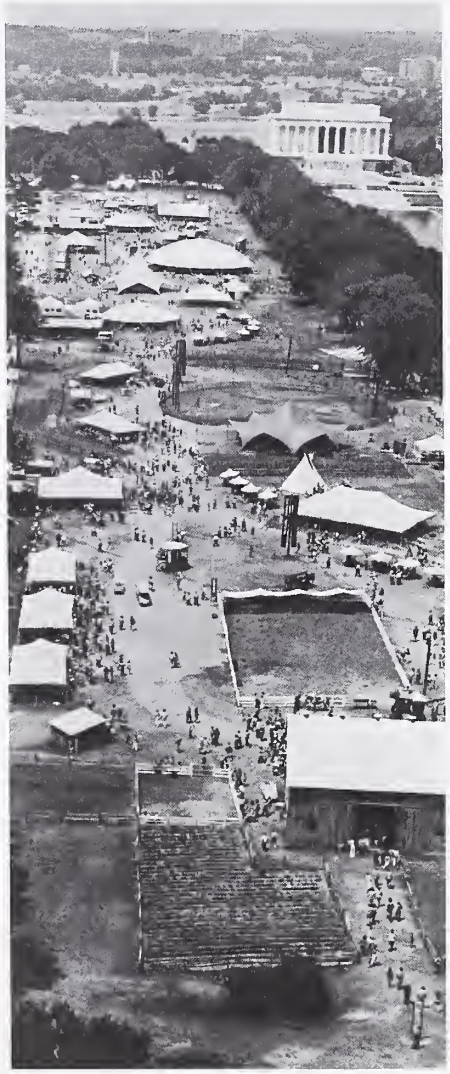
With the filing of this report, the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA) is terminated.

The five volumes contain the following information:

—Volumes III (this volume), IV and V: a 56 section listing of Bicentennial activities in all the states, territories, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and foreign countries.

The sections are arranged alphabetically, and each begins with a brief descriptive overview. Following this, the projects and events are listed by city. These activity summaries are based on information reported to the ARBA and contained in the automated Bicentennial Information Network (BINET) system.

—Volume I: a narrative account from nine perspectives, with color photographs, of America's Bicentennial celebration as it occurred.



—Volume II: an appendix to Volume I which provides detailed lists and brief descriptions of officially endorsed projects; names of persons who served with various national, state and local Bicentennial groups; ARBA staff members; all the officially recognized Bicentennial Communities; tables detailing grant monies; details of federal agency participation; private sector involvement; lists of public information materials produced; and other such information. It includes a limited number of black and white photographs.

These five volumes contain only those events and projects which were reported to, or otherwise came to the attention of, the ARBC or the ARBA. There were undoubtedly thousands more.

Tracking the Bicentennial

Tracking and disseminating information on Bicentennial activities was a primary function of both the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission (ARBC) and the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration (ARBA). To accomplish these functions, the Bicentennial Information Network—BINET—was established in 1973 under the ARBC. BINET evolved into a system for gathering, cataloguing and publishing details on the activities comprising America's Bicentennial celebration.

The bulk of Volumes III, IV and V of this report contain summaries of the projects and events catalogued in the files of BINET during its nearly four years of operations.

Need for BINET

From the beginning, America's Bicentennial commemoration promised to be enormously diverse. Thousands of activities were to take place at local, state, regional, national and international levels, appealing to people throughout the world and touching on a multitude of themes.

Under the ARBC and the ARBA, guidelines and programs were developed to assist the country in planning and carrying out its Bicentennial celebration. Examples discussed in earlier volumes were the three themes—Heritage '76, Festival USA and Horizons '76—and the Bicentennial Communities Program.

To keep track of and coordinate the many Bicentennial efforts, ARBC staff devised various classifications for describing activities. In addition to the three themes, there were 44 subject areas, 31 methods of presentation and 18 segments of the population to which special emphasis might be given. Geographic scope could range from local to international. Events could take place on any one or more of the 672 days between March 1975 and December 31, 1976.

It soon became obvious that billions of combinations were possible and that a computer would be required to keep track of plans and programs and to monitor the overall balance of activities. BINET was the answer.

The development and operation of BINET was facilitated by a nationwide computer/communications facility available to the ARBC and the ARBA. Under a service contract arranged by the General Services Administration for all federal government agencies, Computer Sciences Corporation provided teleprocessing services to support BINET's computer processing and remote terminal communications requirements.

Gathering the Information

The chronology of BINET's development and the methods used to disseminate Bicentennial information are described in Volume II, Chapter 7, of this report. Described here are the sources of the data and the process of gathering, editing and cataloguing information.

Using the criteria and classifications they had developed, ARBC staff designed forms for gathering details on Bicentennial projects and events for input to BINET. They were to be filled out by project sponsors. The ARBC staff tested the forms initially by completing them for several hundred projects and events, using data from program plans and descriptions previously sent to the ARBC. In May 1973, these forms became the initial data base. Following the formal public introduction of BINET in July 1973, the forms (see the Appendix, p. A-3, for copies) were distributed widely to Bicentennial program planners, primarily through the state Bicentennial organizations and ARBC regional offices.

Completed BINET forms were returned to the ARBC/ARBA by every conceivable source, among them a Bicentennial totem pole carver in Alaska, a 14 year old Wisconsin lad who was editing a Bicentennial newspaper, and officials from thousands of local Bicentennial committees. After the forms were reviewed and edited by the ARBC, the information was transferred to punched cards which were fed into BINET.

Weekly Update

Each week the BINET file was updated with information obtained from the forms submitted on new or modified projects and events. Some updates involved only minor editorial changes. However, many involved substantial additions of new material or extensive changes. In those cases, a copy of the information, as it was filed in BINET, was prepared by the computer and distributed to the sponsor for confirmation. Copies were also sent to state Bicentennial organizations and ARBC/ARBA regional offices.

By the beginning of 1975, the volume of entries outgrew the capacity of ARBA's Master Calendar Services staff, who were responsible for operating the BINET system, and outside contractors were employed. From January 1975 through December 1976, the bulk of the editing and punched card preparation was performed by One America, Inc., a small minority-owned business in Washington, D.C.

As the Bicentennial interest and activity peaked during the first six months of 1976, the volume of new entries and corrections sometimes exceeded 2,500 per week. BINET was barely able to keep pace. By January 1977, nearly 200,000 corrections had been processed by the Master Calendar Services staff and contractors, while the record for each project or event had been updated an average of three times. Over the nearly four year period of BINET's operations, 122,000 copies of new or updated records were mailed out for confirmation.

Another contract was entered into in connection with a major ARBA effort to obtain details on Bicentennial events. From March through May 1975, Billboard Publications, Inc. conducted a series of solicitations to obtain details on events from program planners and sponsors.

Final BINET Tally

The last BINET update was carried out on January 28, 1977 and yielded a final total of 66,484 Bicentennial projects and events. From this final update, magnetic tapes were prepared containing summaries of those activities. At the U.S. Government Printing Office, the tapes were transformed by a computer-driven electronic photocomposition process into the typeset pages comprising the bulk of these three volumes.

Bicentennial project and event totals for states and other entities are shown in the accompanying table.

The BINET Bicentennial

Volumes III, IV and V consist of 56 sections, one for each of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and the territories of Guam, American Samoa and the Virgin Islands, with a final section for other countries.

Names, Numbers, Narratives

Each section begins with two pages of introductory material. First is the name of the official Bicentennial organization of the state or comparable entity, with a brief statement on when and how it was created and its Bicentennial theme, where such existed. A reproduction of the symbol or logotype most commonly associated with the Bicentennial in the state or area is also presented.

Next are various statistics. The numbers of officially recognized Communities, Campuses and Military Installations are presented first. (The total may differ from those in the narratives. This is due to the ARBA's counting joint city-county applications as one, whereas a state may have counted them separately. Further, some states continued their own recognition program after the ARBA's was concluded.) The numbers of projects and events filed with BINET appear next. (The number derived from BINET usually is less than the actual number of activities in a given state or area. A single BINET entry may incorporate a number of relatively small local activities, as many lists of events received by the ARBA were too long for each event to be recorded individually. Nor were details submitted to BINET on every event taking place: some states, communities and foreign countries sent the ARBA just a sampling of their activities, and themselves maintained and published more complete and detailed compilations of Bicentennial activities.)

The final statistic is a population figure, which conveys an idea of the number of people served by Bicentennial programming. The figures, based on U.S. Bureau of the Census Current Population Reports, Series P-25, are estimates as of July 1, 1976 for the states and the District of Columbia and July 1, 1973 for Puerto Rico and the territories.

Following the statistics are the names and addresses of the official Bicentennial archives for the state or comparable entity.

The list of members of the official Bicentennial organization, which appears next, was supplied by each state or entity during the winter of 1976-77. Where the organization was still active at that time, it provided no final date after a member's name [i.e., J. Smith (1975-)]. The organization may since have concluded its activities. Some, however, are continuing their operations, in a few instances until 1989.

The final segment of the introductory material to each section is a narrative, written by the official Bicentennial organization and summarizing its state's or area's Bicentennial activities.

The photographs accompanying the sections came from the states or other localities, ARBA files and individuals. Credits appear in Volume I of this report.

Summaries of Activities

Each of the 56 sections concludes with BINET summaries of activities. Within each section they are organized by city, except for the section on other countries, which is organized by country and then by city. Under each city, projects are sorted alphabetically by title, while separate events are sorted by date.

The ARBA defined an event as something happening at a specific time and place with participants and an audience. Activities without these characteristics were termed projects. Restoration of a building is a project; its dedication ceremony is an event. Publication of a book is a project without an associated event; a fireworks display is an opposite example.

The 66,484 summaries in these volumes include 2,146 projects which involved the planning of one or more events.

Each summary provides a brief description of the activity, its geographic scope and the name, organization and address of the sponsor. The original BINET reference number is also given, and a special notation is made under those projects supported by ARBA grants or officially recognized by the ARBA. Where sponsors provided specific information on locations of events, it is also included.

The sample summaries below show the organization and content of each entry.

To conserve space and improve readability, not all information available in the BINET records was included in the activity summaries. For example, such items as subject classification, method of presentation and group emphasis were omitted, as were sponsor telephone numbers. The theme area of projects has not been included. Likewise, information on reservations, admission and tour arrangements has not been included for events. This additional information is available, however, in the BINET master file (see the Appendix, p. A–1).

Alabama

The Bicentennial celebration in Alabama evoked an enthusiastic response over five years, building up to a crescendo of celebrations around the weekend of July 4, 1976. Hundreds of programs in hundreds of communities were planned and executed over these years. Nearly everyone in the state, from first graders seeing How Ya Comin', Alabama? to their grandparents enjoying an old-fashioned barbecue on the Fourth of July, had a part in it.

Early in Alabama's planning, it was decided that the state should have a few statewide programs, but the main emphasis would be to encourage as broad involvement as possible by individuals and communities. There were 187 officially recognized Bicentennial communities, towns, cities, colleges, military installations and organizations. The University of Alabama was the nation's first university to be recognized as a Bicentennial Campus.

Federal funds in the form of matching grants were awarded to 101 Bicentennial Communities for projects of lasting value, reflecting the three Bicentennial themes of Heritage '76, Festival USA and Horizons '76. ARBA grants totaled over $350,000 in these programs. Where a small town such as Scottsboro (population 9,300) in Jackson County received $2,500 toward erecting a bust of the county's namesake, Andrew Jackson, the metropolis of Birmingham (350,000) received a like amount for its ambitious program.

How Ya Comin', Alabama?, an award-winning 25 minute multimedia presentation, was the first of Alabama's statewide projects. It was followed by others large and small, from a Bicentennial license tag to a quarterly Bicentennial Gazette, reprints of several Alabama histories, a Bicentennial Trail of 200 historic sites throughout the state, a statewide Battle of the Bands to pick Alabama's most representative bands and a Bicentennial Belle Pageant, to name a few. Active support and, in some cases, grants were given to programs of significance to the whole state, such as a film on the history of education in Alabama, restoration of the pre-Civil War iron foundry at Tannehill State Park, erection of a museum at historic Fort Toulouse and a summer reading program on Alabama historical subjects for 50,000 school children in the state.

National and regional programs were also welcomed in Alabama. The Tennessee Valley Bicentennial South inaugurated its tour of eight states of the southeast in January 1976. The Bicentennial Wagon Train Pilgrimage drew enthusiastic crowds which rode along with it, camped out and staged a professional show in 28 communities. It was on its way to join one of five wagon trains from all over the United States, to meet at Valley Forge on July 4th. Equally large crowds turned out for the Armed Forces Caravan in 11 cities, Armed Forces Band concerts and the Freedom Train.

The Bicentennial celebration has left its distinct mark in Alabama. It is a permanent mark, whether "bricks and mortar" or lasting impressions in the minds of young school children. Perhaps more important, though, are the renewed awareness of a rich heritage and the will to unite it with today's work and creative designs for an even fuller tomorrow.

Alaska

Alaska filled its cornucopia of Bicentennial activities with fruit as diverse as the state's population and geography. As part of a living history village on the Alaska State Fairgrounds, historic buildings constructed during the settlement of the Matanuska Colony in the 1930's were renovated. A comprehensive oral history program involving those Matanuska settlers still living has added color and depth to this major restoration effort.

In addition, Resolution Park was established in honor of Captain James Cook, who gave his name to Alaska's Cook Inlet. Its main feature is a statue of Cook, which was donated by British Petroleum-Alaska.

Over 40 additional parks and playgrounds were developed around the state and are evidence of the widespread Bicentennial enthusiasm and effort. One, Anglanivik Park, is the first park in the community of Bethel. Appropriately, "Anglanivik" is a term in Yupik—an Eskimo language—meaning "a place to have fun."

The tourism industry in Alaska will benefit for years from numerous museums and tourist information centers created as a result of the Bicentennial. Fifteen communities constructed or expanded museums to preserve indigenous history and culture. From the northernmost town in Alaska, Shishmaref, to the southernmost tip at Metlakatla, residents volunteered much time and effort to see those museums through to completion.

Of special significance is the Last Chance Museum in Juneau. Original equipment used to mine gold when Juneau was first established was located, cleaned, inventoried and put on display. Much of it was actually put to use to complete the project.

Perhaps one of the most spectacular Bicentennial projects was carried out in Anchorage—The Pageant of Alaskan Civilization, a series of 20 panels done in bas relief. Each four foot by eight foot panel depicts a segment of Alaska's history, beginning with Peter the Great and ending with the Trans-Alaska Pipeline. The mural was sponsored by Alaska Mutual Savings Bank and hangs in its lobby.

Publications that originated during the Bicentennial era include histories of nursing and education in Alaska. The Future Homemakers of America, Alaska Chapter, recorded on tape and in writing the stories, reflections and opinions of many of Alaska's pioneer and homesteading citizens. Beginning and Intermediate Tlingit helps make the study of that language more easily accessible to those young members of the Alaska community who are searching for their native identity, almost lost in the development of the new state.

Other projects throughout the state included traveling exhibits and photographic displays, identification of historic sites, marking of the historic Iditarod Trail, festivals, special concerts and dance programs, Mt. McKinley expeditions, presentations of historical dramas, flag ceremonies and arts and crafts contests.

As evidenced by the widespread participation of Alaskans, the spirit of the Bicentennial abounded, and it will not be forgotten in the years to come in the "Great Land."

American Samoa

The diverse Bicentennial activities in the Territory of American Samoa were a microcosm of the programs occurring in the 50 states. All ambitious undertakings, the activities are of interest and benefit to all citizens.

In honoring the past, a documentary film, The Life Style of Samoa, recorded the Samoan culture and customs as lived by Samoans today. It preserves and depicts present governmental and private development actions and traditional ceremonies of the territory. There was also a comprehensive educational program designed to acquaint Samoan children with essential elements of the American Revolution.

A Flag Day Arts Festival took place in Pago Pago, as well as a three day observance of the 200th anniversary which included competitions, parades, games and exhibitions. A school Bicentennial Day, sponsored by the American Samoa Arts Council and the Department of Education, encompassed students throughout the area. Additionally, the governor's office sponsored a Youth Bicentennial Festival.

American Samoa abounded with construction and improvement programs. The one and a half mile airport access road was beautified and renamed Saolotoga (Freedom) Drive. There was a general overhaul of the island's auditorium. This project will improve support for cultural performing arts of the Samoan people. The present stadium was improved, and the first recreation center on the island was also created with facilities for basketball, volleyball and tennis.

A replica of an ancient oceangoing canoe 40 feet in length was constructed and has become a floating museum, while an extension to the Museum of American Samoa will enable expansion of exhibits dealing with the natural and written history of Samoa. And, at Onesosopo, situated at the eastern portion of the bay area, a public park was developed.

A center was developed to train those involved in early childhood education throughout American Samoa. At the Government House, a project was underway to collect, identify and cultivate indigenous edible, ceremonial, medicinal and ornamental plants in the Botanical Garden. They will be for public exhibit, research and education.

American Samoans made invaluable contributions to the Bicentennial of the United States, and our country is more complete because of their participation.

Arizona

Arizona's commemoration of our nation's Bicentennial could be characterized as a wave of broad involvement and enthusiasm. Communities, ranging in population from Phoenix with 1.2 million to Tombstone with 1,200, inspired large measures of citizen participation. Within these communities, the diverse age and cultural groups found relevant means to express their uniqueness as part of the great mosaic which makes up Arizona and the other 49 states. Over 1,000 events and projects which were on the Bicentennial agenda in Arizona were staged and sponsored by local volunteer Bicentennial committees, service clubs, Indian tribes, communities, high schools and state and federal agencies. Every individual in the state of Arizona was in some way touched by the Bicentennial, whether by a neighborhood celebration, or the American Freedom Train, or a school pageant. The primary movers behind each project and event were volunteer citizens. Government agencies, though highly supportive, did not direct or plan Arizona's Bicentennial commemoration. This, of course, was exactly the way it had to be, and the way the country was created—through citizen participation and voluntary action.

Bicentennial activities followed many themes. Among Arizonans, there was a great deal of interest in the preservation and restoration of early Indian dwellings, Spanish missions and presidios, "Old West" towns, pioneer homes, cemeteries and community landmarks. Some representative examples include: The Rosson House, Phoenix; Schiefflin Historic District, Tombstone; Bashford House, Prescott; the presidio in Tubac; and Pioneer Arizona Living History Museum in Phoenix.

Native American groups were actively engaged in Bicentennial projects. The Hopi tribe is restoring the historic Walpi Village, which has been continuously inhabited for over 400 years. The Navajo Indian Nation, in October of 1974, broke and blessed ground for a new Navajo Heritage Center. Work is now underway to complete the center, along with a southwestern desert zoo. Phoenix urban Indians are developing a child care center designed to prepare Indian children for entrance into public schools and are also working on a model alcoholism rehabilitation center.

Arizona communities staged a variety of festivals, celebrations and dance and concert performances which highlighted the colorful history of the southwest. Notable events included: The Tucson Festival, Tucson; Old Time Music Festivals, Payson; Brewery Gulch Days, Bisbee; Folk Arts Fair, Prescott; All-American Playwrights Festival, Phoenix; and Lake Havasu City's London Bridge Days.

During the last four years, there were many outstanding national and regional Bicentennial programs which tied Arizona to the rest of the nation and to our neighbor Mexico. The reenactment of the 1775–76 Juan Bautista de Anza Expedition was one of the high points of the Bicentennial in Arizona. It involved trail riding groups, historians and school children from California, Arizona and Sonora, Mexico in an authentic and colorful reenactment of de Anza's trek from Horcasitas, Mexico to San Francisco, California. All along the trek, thousands of citizens attended local festivities, which honored the early Spanish explorers and the Spanish heritage of the southwest.

Other national and regional programs which caught the interest of Arizonans were the Commemoration of the 1776 Dominguez-Escalante Expedition; stops by the American Freedom Train in Yuma, Tempe and Tucson; the Wagon Train Pilgrimage across Arizona; and the Armed Services Bicentennial Caravan, which visited virtually every Arizona community.

The climax of Bicentennial activities was July 4, 1976. Every city and town celebrated. In Flagstaff, thousands watched the All-Indian Pow Wow; Prescott held a weekend Frontier Days Rodeo and Parade. Fountain Hills staged a tremendous fireworks display, and Eloy held a community dance in an airplane hangar. Every adult and child had the opportunity to share in a memorable 200th birthday commemoration.

The Bicentennial is more than just a memory in Arizona. The accomplishments of volunteer committees and civic groups remain. For those looking to the future, there are community action plans created at 10 different town meetings and the report on the status of senior citizens, "The Elderly Arizonan." There are the community gardens and tree-planting projects in Scottsdale, Nogales and Bisbee; there are the newly constructed parks in Duncan and Wickenburg. There are films on southwest history produced by the University of Arizona—Paths in the Wilderness; the Arizona and Nevada Bicentennial commissions' Steamboats on the Colorado; and the Maricopa County Community College District's Days Remembered. There are restored community landmarks and over 50 recently published books and pamphlets which depict various aspects of Arizona—its history and culture. All records of the Arizona Bicentennial Commission, memorabilia, etc. will be deposited with the State Department of Library and Archives and with the Arizona State Historical Society.

A fitting conclusion to Bicentennial activity occurred December 7, 1976 with the dedication of the U.S.S. Arizona Anchor Memorial. The memorial was constructed on the grounds of the Arizona State Capitol and financed by donations from thousands of Arizonans. The memorial will be a lasting tribute to those men who gave their lives for freedom at Pearl Harbor, and to all who have made service to country their first priority.

The Arkansas American Revolution Bicentennial Celebration Program was initiated with the passage of House Concurrent Resolution 88 by the General Assembly of 1971. Sponsored by Representative William F. Foster, Sr. of Lonoke County, the resolution requested that the governor appoint a Bicentennial Celebration Committee of nine members "to make plans for Arkansas' participation in the Bicentennial celebration of the formation of the United States."

The Bicentennial Celebration Committee was appointed by Governor Dale L. Bumpers. The General Assembly of 1973 expanded the membership of the committee from nine to 11 by the addition of the State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution and the State President of the Sons of the American Revolution (House Concurrent Resolution 15 of 1973).

Dr. John L. Ferguson, state historian, served as chairman of the Bicentennial Celebration Committee from 1971 until 1975, when he was replaced by Lieutenant Governor Joe Purcell. Mrs. Glennis Parker was employed as the first director of the Bicentennial Celebration Program in 1972. She resigned in 1975 and was succeeded by Mrs. Ruth Tate.

Headquarters of the Bicentennial program was the First State Capitol, Arkansas' old state house which was built in 1836. At its peak in 1975–76, the Bicentennial staff included five persons: director, program coordinator, grants administrator, information officer and a secretary.

The Arkansas program saw the designation of 266 official Bicentennial Communities in each of the state's 75 counties. Matching grants for Bicentennial projects numbered 264, with a total of $560,000 disbursed. In addition, one county received a Title X grant of $767,000 for a Bicentennial park.

Efforts in Arkansas were directed primarily toward local and community involvement, and the program was remarkably successful in small towns and rural areas. Mrs. Elaine Walker, a volunteer, organized a statewide Youth Rally at the State Capitol March 19, 1976 and led in the establishment of numerous Bicentennial Communities in northwestern Arkansas. A permanent Bicentennial memorial, housing a replica of the Liberty Bell, is under construction on the State Capitol grounds. A statewide cleanup or antilitter campaign is in progress as a development of the Horizons theme.

Projects at the local level have been as numerous and as diverse as the composition of the committees which planned them. All segments of the population—youth, minorities, the elderly and others—have been actively involved. The three themes of Heritage, Festival and Horizons have been amply represented and developed in projects all over Arkansas. Among the many highlights of the celebration were the founding of the Arkansas County Agricultural Museum in Stuttgart; Johnny Cash Day at Rison, March 20, 1976; the passage of the Bicentennial Wagon Train Pilgrimage across Arkansas in March 1976; and the commemoration of the Colbert Incident at Arkansas Post National Memorial, July 4, 1976.

California

California's Bicentennial commission was faced with a problem unique among all the state Bicentennial commissions during the four years leading up to the Bicentennial celebration: the 1967 legislation which established the commission stipulated that it "must operate without the appropriation of state funds."

Thus, financing Bicentennial activities became the primary challenge for the commission.

According to the enabling legislation, expenditures of the commission were to be financed from donations, gifts and grants from private or public sources.

It was not quite that easy.

For one thing, legislators back in 1967 did not foresee the oil embargo, double-digit inflation and the ensuing recession.

Those factors made donations hard to raise.

Fortunately for Californians who wanted meaningful programs, the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration was supplied with matching grant monies for distribution to the states, which funded most of the state commission programs in California.

Industry also contributed some monies or personnel to commission efforts. Some funds came from sales of state medallions, but these did not measure up to expectations.

Thus, faced with a small budget and expensive tasks, the commission took the most practical course it could: it went to the people and enlisted grassroots support.

Before it could do so, the American Revolution Bicentennial Commission of California first had to draft a pamphlet of purposes and procedures so that local committees and other citizens could see how the state commission functioned and how local Bicentennial committees could be officially appointed. This task was accomplished early in 1973. Both the pamphlet and instructions for appointing the local Bicentennial committees were circulated throughout the state.

The people of California responded quickly, and soon local committees were planning Bicentennial programs. By May 1976, California had 361 officially designated Bicentennial Communities, ranking it 10th in the nation. By July 4, 1976, 95 percent of all Californians lived in cities or counties which had Bicentennial committees implementing patriotic activities and projects commemorating the nation's birth. And California led the nation in two fields: it was first in Bicentennial Colleges and Universities and first in Bicentennial Military Installations.

Meanwhile, the ARBCC has been able to adopt and bring to fruition over 200 official Bicentennial projects. It would take too long to detail all of them here. But some should be mentioned because of the impact they have already had or will continue to have on the state as a whole.

These include:

- The California-Colonial History Time Line, which synchronizes events on both coasts from 1769–1783;
- An interpretive brochure on the origin of mission music, and related mission music projects;
- Programs planned for students which depict California's musical and literary heritage;
- Historical restorations throughout the state;
- Statues and historical markers;
- An historic bicycle route developed and posted by the ARBCC and CALTRANS along the Pacific Coast;
- Guided tours through the Mother Lode country, developed by the ARBCC and the Department of Parks and Recreation;
- The Allensworth Film Project, depicting the only California community to be founded, financed and governed by Blacks;
- The Annual Afro-American History Week, which dramatizes historical contributions of Black Americans toward the development of California;
- Two Indian cultural centers, one on each side of the Sierra Nevada, serving the Miwok and Paiute-Shoshone tribes;
- A sound-slide show describing the reenactment of the de Anza expedition;
- Projects designed to help either handicapped or underprivileged children in California; and
- State and local tree-planting programs.

Four years ago, California's Bicentennial commission adopted the motto: From a Golden Past to a Golden Future.

One hundred years from now, when future Californians open the Commission Time Capsule and review what was done in 1976, they will see that today's Californians worked hard to make that transition a reality.

Colorado

Although December 1976, the closing month of the 22 month Centennial-Bicentennial year, rolled around all too quickly, historic restorations, ethnic memorials, educational programs and arts celebrations that will become annual events will continue to remind Coloradans of the outstanding achievements of the Centennial-Bicentennial commemoration.

During the Centennial-Bicentennial year, 188 communities, representing all 63 counties, were awarded national recognition as Bicentennial Communities because of the excellence of their observances. All 63 counties received CCBC funding, with almost $2 million in grant money generating over $10 million in projects throughout the state. And Colorado was among the top three states in the nation in total projects and community participation.

The Community Incentive Program was devised to spark participation. It permitted communities to finance local commemorations by selecting from a wide spectrum of suggested activities and awarded them up to $750 in grants to stage the projects selected. Through this ingenious program, a total of $191,850 was awarded to 217 communities representing 61 of the state's 63 counties.

The Colorado Centennial-Bicentennial Commission's marketing program, established to sell the Colorado Centennial medal and to license use of the Colorado Centennial logo, earned a million dollars for statewide Centennial-Bicentennial projects and events. The medal, available in bronze, gold-plated bronze and silver, is the only commemorative medal ever authorized by Congress to be struck at the Denver Mint. Sales of this item alone totaled a half million dollars.

Royalties from licensing the logo for use on various Colorado Centennial-Bicentennial souvenirs totaled over $200,000. Sale of jewelry, posters and Colorado Centennial flags yielded gross revenues of $70,000 for Centennial and Bicentennial projects throughout the state.

Programs funded in Colorado include 28 parks, 52 restorations, 29 museums, 30 community centers and facilities, 15 community service programs, 48 festival events and 24 educational programs.

Colorado was the only state to have a fourth thematic area in addition to the Heritage, Festival and Horizons commemorative themes: that of Ethnic Minority. Under it, 50 projects were awarded grants of $277,391, to make Colorado's Centennial-Bicentennial commemoration truly representative of the state's history and all its peoples.
